

Against Speed
by Jonathan Greene

To be anywhere
you have to speed down
and walk slowly
to know intimately
just your small plot
of earth
that was given to you
by luck and
divine Chance.

Driving by—
so many racing
beyond the speed limit—
you learned nothing
except life has passed you by.