

Jay and Jeanie Schottenstein Prize in Cardiovascular Science

Background

The Schottenstein Prize in Cardiovascular Sciences, established by a $2 million endowment from Jay and Jeanie Schottenstein to The Ohio State University, will be awarded biennially to an international leader in cardiovascular sciences (including clinical sciences of cardiovascular medicine and cardiothoracic surgery and the basic sciences of molecular and cellular cardiology). The Schottenstein Laureate will receive an honorarium of $100,000.

Eligibility/Award Details

This prestigious prize has been created to provide national and international recognition to a physician or biomedical scientist who has made extraordinary and sustained leadership contributions to improving health care; or who has successfully pursued innovative biomedical research with demonstrated translational benefits to patient care. Those honored will be practitioners and scientists whose accomplishments and contributions have taken place over a career of dedicated and focused scientific discovery.

Nomination Process

Fill out the form and submit with the following items:

 please use "check" boxes

A letter from the nominator describing the primary reasons for which the nominee merits consideration for the Prize—relevant criteria might include scientific innovation, creativity, leadership, education, dedication, and importance of the nominee's work to the field of cardiovascular research. Consideration will also be given to the nominee's role as mentor of young researchers and clinicians.

A brief one-page biography, including previous awards received by the nominee

A list of six to eight peer-reviewed journal references that support the nomination—do not send reprints

Supporting letters from up to three additional colleagues familiar with the nominee's work these can either be included with the nomination package or mailed separately.
